

Manoj Dias–Abey was a Postdoctoral Fellow with the Centre for Law in the Contemporary Workplace from June 2016 to June 2018. Manoj examined the strategies civil society organizations use to improve the working conditions of migrant farmworkers, especially given the nature of the globalized food system. Manoj is interested in the broader issue of emerging worker organizations—e.g. innovative unions, worker centres, legal clinics, activist and advocacy bodies, transnational advocacy networks, and social movements—and how these organizations and movements draw upon, and are limited and transformed by, the legal environment.

Manoj completed his PhD at the Queen’s University Faculty of Law in 2016. His dissertation was titled “Sandcastles of Hope? Civil Society Organizations and the Working Conditions of Migrant Farmworkers in North America.” Manoj’s graduate study was supported by a number of fellowships and grants, including the Michael D. Failes Graduate Fellowship in Labour & Employment Law. He also holds a LLM (Research) and BA/LLB from the University of New South Wales in Sydney, Australia.

Before deciding to pursue an academic career, Manoj worked as a lawyer in private practice, an editor/writer at a legal publishing company, and a policy officer with the Australian government.

Some of Manoj’s publications can be found on his academia.edu page.